

TRUSTS.

The great combination of capital, operating in raw materials, and raising the prices of them, by their ability to control the entire output of a continent, can exist only by the stupidity or the indirect connivance of public officials. Their ability rests upon the grant of a government title. All titles to realty, under which terms all mining products are included, rest upon the implied provision that the government may resume ownership. In the case of eminent domain upon the payment of an equivalent, in the exercise of police powers, upon such terms as the government may prescribe. As decided in the Iowa liquor cases it may destroy values without recompense. So in case of public need, as in war, it may appropriate the title of property absolutely.

The great implied principle is, that all property must be used for the public good and can in no case be used for the general injury. The principle goes farther, as in the case of Railroad Corporations, where the legislatures and the courts have declared that property of this class cannot be allowed to earn for its owners undue profits. The government may proceed by first restricting established rates or directly by forfeiting the franchises and succeeding to the ownership of the property.

The great Lead, Copper, Petroleum and Combinations come clearly within these principles. The government has a right to act without further legislation and it is its duty to proceed, and at once. Governments are organized for the benefit of all the governed not for protecting unscrupulous monopolies. There is no question of fact. Copper and coal are artificially advanced to a price which is an extortion from the people. The remedy is a direct resumption by the government of all title to property, so used by its owners, as to deprive many of the use of necessities and compel all to pay extortionate prices. —Eastern Mechanic.

IRRIGATION.

On every side is heard the voice of the people clamoring for some laws to promote irrigation. All right, gentlemen, this clamoring comes every two years, but still the irrigation laws are not passed. We cannot depend on the U. S. Government to do the work for many years yet, as the preliminary surveys take a long time. Two years ago a proposition was made to allow the State to borrow mere money than it is allowed to under the present laws. The measure was voted down by the professional economists. Allow the State to extend its credit to a million and a half more, if necessary, and then you can do something with irrigation.

Education Matters in Lundy.

Jim Townsend, of the Homer Index, thus treats of the educational outlook:

"The Trustees of the Mono Lake School District will have a row among themselves, if they don't look out. They want a teacher and disagree as to sex. The singular part of it is that two members of the board are veterans in the conubial ring. They want a young lady teacher. Can't get one too young or too pretty for them—the sly old rascals. The third member is a bachelor—a hold-over from the last generation (though it has been said that he contemplates matrimony in the near future.) He wants a male teacher, a lusty one, who can hammer deviltry out of the big boys and tamp book-juice into them. It is the general belief, however, that the old bach is afraid to trust himself with a pretty schoolma'm."

—All the papers in this State are giving advice to the law-makers. The advice never seems to amount to anything in many instances. When a Legislator wants advice he generally telegraphs for it and signifies his willingness to prepay the express charges.
